MEL SIEMENS: A TRUE SERVANT'S HEART

In his important 2011 survey Hemorrhaging Faith: Why and When Canadian Young Adults are Leaving, Staying and Returning to Church, James Penner notes, "The most effective faith instruction often takes place organically, through a culture of gospel-centred living....The gospel is applied to all areas of life throughout the day, parents [teachers and mentors] are willing to answer children's faith questions, and children are invited to participate in faith practices alongside adults."

The staff at Rosthern Junior College take this observation seriously. Everyone at the school sees themselves as a role model and mentor to students and staff alike. They view all aspects of the school community as rich ground for teachable moments about faith and faithful living.

When he graduated from RJC in 1978, Mel Siemens never saw himself as a teacher. Over the years he has worked as a herdsman in a large dairy barn and as a tile setter. Since 2001, he has worked as a custodian at RJC. While Mel would modestly take credit for shiny floors and a clean facility, he has contributed much more to the learning community at RJC.

Mel embodies the truth of the statement that "actions speak louder than words." He consistently models for students a quiet and patient servant leadership. He is their go-to guy for anything misplaced. He can be seen putting in long hours after work making sure all of their playing fields for soccer and football are ready to go. He responds to all manner of requests with a smile and his best effort to get it done. He chauffeurs, coaches, cheers and encourages.

Mel's resume of service to the church and community is equally impressive. He served as a full-time maintenance volunteer for three years at Camp Shekinah, part of Mennonite Church Saskatchewan's camp program. More recently, Mel has used his holidays on a number of occasions to volunteer for Mennonite Disaster Service assignments as well as for Habitat for Humanity. He is heavily involved in his home congregation, Eigenheim Mennonite Church, and currently serves on the board of the Youth Farm Bible Camp, another of MC Saskatchewan's camps. For over 15 years Mel has been a dedicated volunteer and coach for the Rosthern Soccer Association.

Mel continues to show himself to be a master teacher at RJC, demonstrating daily to the rest of the school community how worship and work can be one when tasks are taken on with a true servant's heart.

SINGING TOGETHER

RJC Chorale and CMU Singers at Knox United Church

On February 28, 2016 a full house at Knox United Church in Saskatoon enjoyed a great concert as the RJC Chorale and CMU Singers joined together for a wonderful afternoon of choral music.

RJC and CMU have a long history of co-operation. Many RJC alumni have chosen to attend Canadian Mennonite Bible College, and its successor Canadian Mennonite University. This concert was evidence of that relationship, serving as a joint fundraiser for both schools.

The main focus of the weekend, though, was music making. It afforded the Chorale another opportunity to sing with Dr. Janet Brenneman, the choral director at CMU whom they had the privilege of working with earlier in the year at Chorfest (a provincial choral festival in Regina). Most of all, it gave students from both schools a chance to sing together, much to the delight of all who attended.

ROSTHERN LONGHORNS WIN PROVINCIAL GOLD!

For the past number of years, RJC and Rosthern High School have joined forces to field the Rosthern Longhorns football team. This year's team had a dream season, winning their league, playoff and provincial competitions. Their undefeated season was capped off with a home-field provincial gold medal winning game against Birch Hills.

The team, coached by brothers Jim Epp (RJC) and Ralph Epp (RHS), was in the provincial finals two previous times in the past five years. They were finally able to win it all this season. This was the first provincial win in football for RHS, and the first since the early 1970s for RJC. Congratulations!

RJC CELEBRATES ATHLETICS AT FUNDRAISING BANQUET

RJC's annual fundraising banquet in the fall celebrated the rich legacy of athletic achievements and experiences students enjoyed over the years. The school auditorium was packed with well over 300 people who came to meet old teammates and coaches, relive past games and support current students at RJC.

As staff members Karalee Kuny and Ryan Wood entertained the crowd by taking on the role of sports commentators, the evening became the "RJC Mennonite SportsCenter Committee."

Karalee Kuny and Ryan Wood

Highlights of the evening included several interviews and presentations. Josh Janzen, Adam Ens, Joel Ens, Paul Janzen, Jesse Ens and Matt Enns, volleyball players at both RJC and the University of Saskatchewan in the 1990s, shared stories about their playing careers. Arnie Boldt talked about his experiences representing Canada as a world record holding Paralympic athlete, competing in track and field as well as cycling. Boldt was a recipient of the Order of Canada for his contributions to Paralympic sport.

Arnie Boldt with Karalee Kuny

RJC also recognized 10 championship

hockey and curling teams from 1939-1970 with championship banners. These banners now hang proudly in the RJC gym.

RJC HOSTS PROVINCIAL GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

RJC was the place to be for the highest level of competition in Saskatchewan girls' volleyball last fall. Ten teams from across the province competed in the Saskatchewan High Schools Athletic Association 3A championship, November 20-21. RJC hosted an outstanding tournament and the games were intense and exciting. The RJC girls' team advanced into the playoff round but were eliminated from medal play. The final was a great match between Wakaw and Wynyard, with the Wakaw squad coming out on top.

SAM HAWKINS — ENJOYING THE WILD WEST!

Boys' Dorm Council at Sam Hawkins

The RJC Boys' Dorm Council went all out planning this year's Sam Hawkins day, an annual all school event. Built around the theme of the Wild West, students enjoyed costumes, decorations, great food and entertainment as they took on the roles of cowboy, rancher, sheriff, rodeo performer and jailbird.

Events like Sam Hawkins are highlights of the school year and play an important role in building community at RJC. Way to go guys!

THEATRE ARTS

RJC offers students an opportunity to learn the ins and outs of performance in the theatre arts class. The culmination of their semester's work this year was several performances of The Fearsome Pirate Frank. The students did a tremendous job with all aspects of the production, including costuming, sets, props, lights, special effects and performance. The audience, which included many elementary school students from Rosthern and surrounding areas, enjoyed the antics of Frank and his band of actors as they were kidnapped by actual pirates and bungled their way through a series of adventures and escapades on the high seas.

A TRIBUTE TO TRENT COOLEY: A WONDERFUL COACH AND ROLE MODEL FOR MANY

Written by Rachel (Janzen) Sharkey, (grad 1991) to Pat Cooley as a tribute

Trent was a slightly intimidating man to me when I first met him at RJC. He was my basketball coach in grade 11, and 12 (1989-91), and he was loud. He was direct, and had very high expectations for all of his players. I was eager to learn, and I soon realized that if I paid attention, Trent could teach us how to play the game well! To me he was a doctor of basketball, a real physician. If my shot was feeling off, he would say "let me take a look at it," observe me take a couple shots, and then render a diagnosis. "You need to tuck your elbow into your body," he'd say. Or, "bring your feet closer together and square up to the basket." The ball would start going in. Then his prescription, "Do one hundred free-throws in a row"!

Trent got so involved in our games that he was often seen standing near the bench taking the same two steps in a layup, or landing a two-foot jump stop, or mimicking jump shots we were doing on the court. He "played" right along with us.

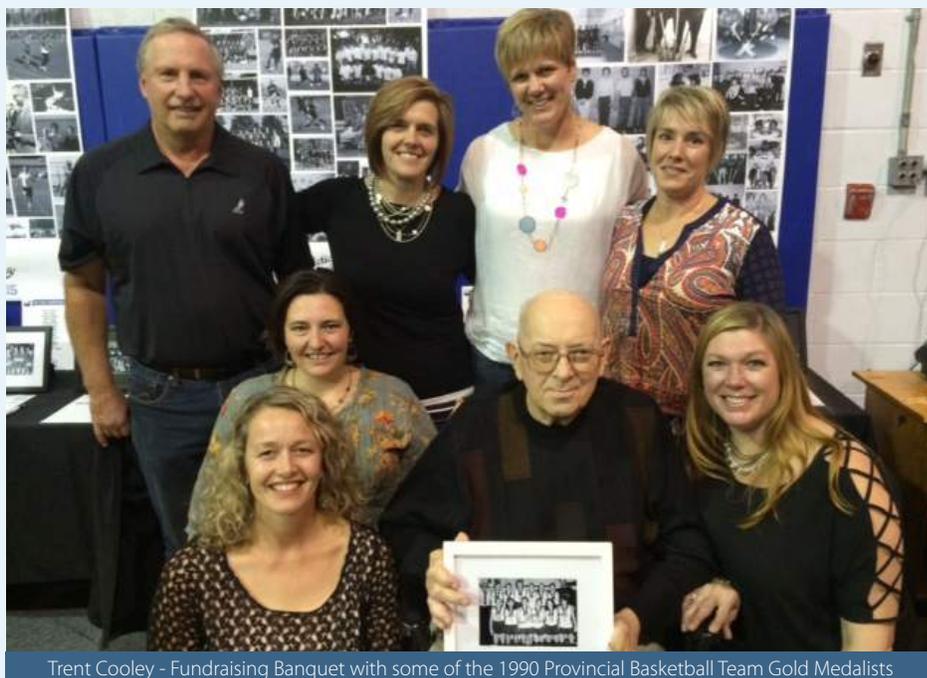

I remember feeling upset when I would receive a foul call, but Trent would say he didn't mind if we fouled during a game. He told me "If you don't have two or three fouls, then you're not in the game!" I really loved playing basketball and being on Trent's teams. It was an amazing time in my life, and I'm so grateful to have experienced Trent on the court and off.

I have a fond memory of him laughing at us, and with us, at a Dairy Queen in Saskatoon; he bought ice cream cones for girls who made a certain number of foul shots in a row at practice. I think I was trying for a steak dinner, which required something like 50 or 75 foul shots in a row. (I never quite got there in spite of many hours of shooting in the gym.) I also nearly drove poor Elan Ewert, my grade 11 roommate, crazy because I practiced my backspin "shooting" constantly.

I cherish my time playing at and for RJC, and Trent was a very big part of that experience for me. Thank you for sharing your man with all of us Pat, I know he will be sorrowfully missed by you and many others.

Very warm thoughts, and big hugs,
Rachel (Janzen) Sharkey

TOURNAMENT OF MEMORIES: MUSCLE MEMORY AND TEAM MEMORIES By Jody Peters (grad 1989)

I have to admit, I had a fair amount of trepidation when asked to play in this year's Tournament of Memories. Mainly because I haven't played basketball of any level in 15 years, but also I am fantastically out of shape. Of course the moment I got to the school I was glad I came. I hadn't been to an RJC event in over 10 years, not for any particular reason other than laziness. But playing with the men who I'd spent years competing with, and against, was instant verification that I'd made the right choice. I loved that our team was such a mishmash of grad years that we were very aptly named "Old Guys" in the tournament schedule.

So much of what RJC meant, and still means, to me lies in the relationships it helped foster. One of the problems with getting on in age is that we often take these good friendships for granted, and let communication slide for no reason other than, and I know I'm repeating myself here, laziness.

But I realized something in our first game. The muscle memory we "Old Guys" require to be even remotely competitive is also a major catalyst in rekindling those relationships and friendships that get dusty with time. You come to realize just how well you know each other when you send a terrible excuse for a no-look pass, and it's caught, converted and anticipated by a guy you haven't played with in a decade and a half. I loved it.

Our bench was a real bench. With all the right jokes, conversations and encouragements of a team. We were a team. A real team. It took less than the first five-minute shift to achieve that; and the men I'd never met before, let alone played with, fit in immediately. We gave real effort, relied on and covered for one another—we played to win. Nothing brings a group of individuals together like sport. It's just been so long since I've played anything that I'd forgotten that. Of course it's in between games that we actually talked about what we've all been doing for the past number of years. Where everyone's been, where they're going, ages of children and all of that. It's funny but that conversation is way easier after playing a game, when you've seen each other in familiar roles already. Real conversations. Not the superficial, rushed blather you have running into someone in the street. All we had to do was rest our aching old bones laid out in the bleachers and talk to each other. For me, that's probably the biggest difference between regular schools and RJC. I never had the kind of conversations with friends in my hometown school that I did while living in that dorm. I love that school and I wouldn't be the man I am today if I hadn't done grades 11 and 12 there.

We could've lost every game (we didn't) and I'd have been just as happy with my decision to play because I got to reconnect with a group of men who I'd lost track of completely. My team.

DO MORE BE MORE UPDATE

Proposed biology lab

CONSTRUCTION TO BEGIN ON SENIOR SCIENCE LABS

This spring, construction will begin on the senior chemistry and biology labs and classrooms; both spaces have remained largely untouched since they were first built in the 1960s. The labs and adjacent storage spaces will be completely updated with new flooring, doors and paint, energy efficient lighting and new windows to decrease energy use. A new fume hood will also be installed in the chemistry lab.

Both spaces will be equipped with an accessible student work station, the technology will also be updated to improve the function of the space for staff and students and create a 21st century learning environment.

The renovation is expected to be completed during the 2016-2017 school year; it is the final piece of the first stage in the DO MORE BE MORE strategic plan. To date the school has raised nearly $500,000 in donations and pledged donations to support the campaign.

“Our supporters are seeing how important it is to invest in the future of RJC,” says Tammy Forrester, RJC board chair. “They continue to be a part of our school’s 110-year-long story, and are helping to pave the way for future students.”

Other projects already completed in the first phase include:

- a new grand piano
- upgrading existing pianos
- a new gym score clock
- new gym bleachers and wall padding
- new team uniforms

The DO MORE BE MORE capital plan aims to raise $1.5 million over five years to support the development of the school. “The future at RJC is exciting as we are all participating in building hope for future generations! We have so much to be thankful for and to celebrate. We are so grateful for the support of the community,” says principal Jim Epp.

PREPARED FOR NEW CHALLENGES

Ernie Toews remembers an RJC class with an academic personality

Growing up in Mayfair Saskatchewan, there was not a lot of academic competition for Ernie Toews (grad 1965). The school was small, and many students weren't interested in pursuing higher education. Or in some cases weren't interested in finishing high school. His older sister and brother had gone before him to RJC; their mother wanted to send her children to a school where students were serious about education.

"My mother was very strong in having us go to RJC because she didn't like the mentality of a lot of the young people around Mayfair," Toews says. "In that time frame there were still lots of guys quitting high school before they graduated." Having grown up on a mixed farm, he knew from experience he didn't want to be a farmer, so he looked forward to attending a school like RJC that could push him academically. "It was definitely an environment that challenged me," Toews says.

He was in the same class as Carol Fast, who won the Governor General's award the year they graduated. And in his first year, more than half the honour roll was from his grade 11 class. A class that he says had a strong academic personality. "Two-thirds of the class went on to higher education in university, technical college, Bible school or Bible college. As compared to my class in Mayfair—one person went on to university, and a few went on to technical school."

Toews was most interested in pursuing chemistry or physics. He received a scholarship and went on to study at the University of Saskatchewan, graduating with a degree in chemical engineering. With a lack of engineering jobs in Saskatchewan at the time, he moved to Alberta, and has had a long-career in the oil industry: working for international companies, smaller private companies and consulting before running three smaller companies. He still works half-time consulting.

Aside from his own business, Toews has taken leadership in a number of charities and on boards. He helped start, and sat on the board of Menno Simons Christian School in Calgary, and was also on the RJC board for six years. Toews also helped his father-in-law set up the Andres Bible School Bursary Foundation, and started Partners Relief and Development with his son Greg, to support refugees from Burma (Myanmar).

The skills he's used both in business and in charitable work over the years were built on the foundation he gained at RJC. "All of the training that I got in terms of independent thinking and taking risks, and doing new challenges all worked together, gave me the ability to start new things," Toews says.

While academics were important, it wasn't all work while he was in school. Attending RJC meant Toews was able to play hockey at a higher level than ever before, and it was the first time he played organized football. One of Toews' favourite memories from the time was driving into Regina with the football coach and other team members to watch a Roughriders game. And though he's been in Alberta more than forty years he's still a Rider's fan. "Once your blood runs green it doesn't change," he says.

It was also at RJC that Toews met his wife, Shirley Andres. They dated while they were in school and have been married almost 49 years. And the friendships they made at RJC have been long-lasting. "You might not see a person for 10 years and you will pick up the conversation, just like old times," he says. "That bond that you forged at RJC and especially in the dorm carries you through a lot of years."

In life-long friendships and success in university and business, Toews can see the foundation he gained at RJC. "You had to leave your comfort zone of the little small-town school that you grew up in and move on to take on new challenges," he says. "Things built on each other, when you've taken risks and participated in new adventures you know you can always do something bigger and more interesting."

ACADEMIC CULTURE LEADS TO ACADEMIC CAREER

Lorin Elias's journey from RJC student to professor of neuropsychology

At the University of Saskatchewan, most professors probably don't expect their papers to end up in Cosmopolitan, Maxim or the New Zealand Herald. But that's what happened to RJC alumnus Lorin Elias (grad 1990), a professor and dean at the UofS. In February, a recent study he had done on kissing drew the attention of media around the world looking for a Valentine's day story.

The study he conducted with a graduate student compared photos of romantic couples with photos of parents kissing children, they found that romantic partners more often tilt their heads to the right, while parents and children go left. The story was picked up by Science Daily, CBC, the Star Phoenix, and of course made it's way into publications like Maxim where the findings were turned into an indicator of a successful relationship. "I was really surprised... it was all over the world in just a matter of days," Elias says.

While it made a splash, that study was just one small part of Elias's research in neuropsychology, in which he focuses largely on the differences between the right and left halves of our brains, and how they impact our daily behaviour. One application for that research is spacial judgement and how that affects driving safety. He just wrapped up the Canadian Naturalistic Driving Study in Saskatoon, where 125 vehicles were outfitted with radars, GPS and cameras to collect data over two years, giving a sense of how people drive naturally.

"Almost anyone can actually sit down and be a really careful driver knowing they're being watched," Elias says. "But if you stick cameras and radar and such in people's cars and you watch them for two years, about 10 days into that they're picking their nose and singing along with the radio, all of the things that someone would normally do in a car, including bad driving." He'll use that information to analyze where people look while driving, as well as where they don't. And he'll study the divided attention that comes when people use phones or try other multitasking, like eating behind the wheel.

After graduating from RJC, Elias has built a career in academics that allows him to do this kind of research. He completed an undergraduate degree in psychology at the UofS, then he went on to a masters and PhD at the University of Waterloo, finishing the PhD in just two years. As he was wrapping up, he got a position teaching psychology at the UofS and has moved up in the department ever since. He was department head of psychology from 2013-2015, and is now serving as interim associate dean of student affairs in the College of Arts and Sciences.

While Elias has worked for years in neuropsychology, it took him a while to discover that's what he wanted to pursue. With a father who specialized in organizational psychology and administration, Elias wasn't aware of the other branches of psychology he might find more interesting. It wasn't until second year that he discovered the more science-like neuropsychology—the study of which pieces of the brain have which functions. "I think of some of us carry out that one course you take where you really realize this is what I want to do," he says. Though it was in a cold classroom, in an 8:30 a.m. winter class, he was hooked. "The fascination with the topic hasn't waned at all in the years since."

Elias has had a long and successful career, but his first exposure to an academic learning environment was at RJC. He started as a grade 10 student in 1987, and found an academic culture that was new to him. While he felt he was doing well, meeting his own expectations, Elias always felt that teachers knew he could do more, and pushed him to try.

That environment helped him succeed in university. "I think a lot of people make that transition from high school to university and find it to be a very rude transition," he says. But having experienced structured study habits at RJC, combined with the high expectations, he was more prepared. "Had I only been experiencing that for the first time in university it probably would have been too late."

The biggest difference he noticed between RJC and his former high school was the culture of academic excellence, which provided a base for years to come. He remembers being in grade nine at another school and feeling embarrassed about good grades and hiding them from other students. "To go from that kind of environment into grade 10 where the culture at RJC was one that not just celebrated accomplishment, but expected it—that for me was a real culture shift and really changed everything for me."
